

Just Checking provides a chart of daily living activity, via the web.

If you're concerned about a family member who lives alone and is becoming forgetful, Just Checking will give you a better understanding of daily living patterns, without being intrusive or invading privacy. Most people maintain a good daily routine in the familiarity of their own home, and may be managing better than you think.

How it works

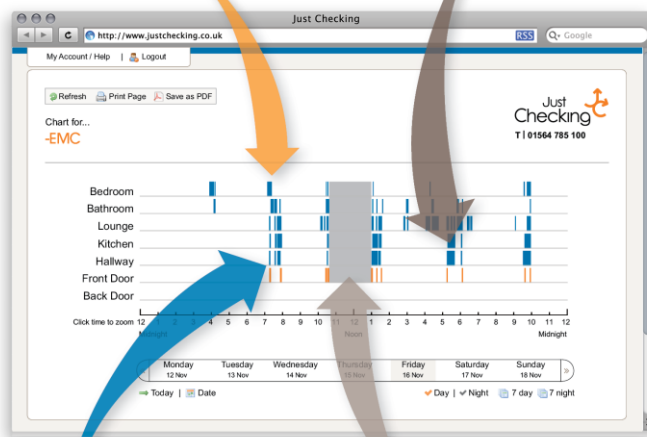

Small wireless sensors in the main rooms of the house generate a chart of activity as the person goes about their daily life. Logging in will show you when a person:

Bedroom:

went to bed,
got up and whether they had a disturbed night...

Kitchen:

visited the Kitchen
to prepare meals...

Hallway:

received expected
visitors or care calls...

Front Door:

left the house
and for how long...

Alerts

Once you have the overall picture you can set up text or email alerts for circumstances where you might need to take a closer look.

- ✓ Not up and about
- ✓ Visitor late
- ✓ Door left open
- ✓ Exit

Used wisely, Just Checking will help you to support independence and share the care between family members and other care services. Remember though, Just Checking does what it says on the box; it is not an emergency alarm system.
